Joint development agreement with AkzoNobel

Revolymmer is pleased to announce that its wholly owned US subsidiary, Itaconix Corporation (“Itaconix”), has signed a joint development agreement with Akzo Nobel Chemicals International B.V. (“AkzoNobel”) to advance commercial collaborations in certain applications for the Itaconix itaconic acid polymer technology platform.

The agreement establishes a broad operating framework for the parties to jointly identify, develop and commercialise new polymers using Itaconix’s patented technology.

“This innovative technology enables the production of polymers from renewable ingredients, which fits closely with our Planet Possible sustainability agenda of doing more with less,” explained Peter Nieuwenhuizen, Research Development & Innovation Director for AkzoNobel’s Specialty Chemicals business. “These bio-based polymers offer unique properties in applications essential to our everyday lives, ranging from water quality to cleaning and hygiene.”

Dr. Kevin Matthews, CEO of Revolymmer, commented: “We share AkzoNobel’s commitment to improving the cost and performance of our customers’ formulations with increasingly more sustainable products. We are excited to begin working together to identify and develop attractive commercial opportunities for our novel polymers.”
